The Life of Brigham Young

Brigham Young was born in Vermont in 1801. He joined the Latter-day Saint movement in 1832, and quickly became one of the most trusted followers of Joseph Smith, the founder of the movement. After Smith was killed in 1844, Young was chosen to succeed him as president of the Church.

Under Young's leadership, the Latter-day Saints faced a number of challenges. They were persecuted by the US government, and they were forced to flee their homes in Illinois and Missouri. In 1847, Young led the Latter-day Saints to the Salt Lake Valley, where they established a new home.

Young was a strong and decisive leader, and he played a key role in the development of the Latter-day Saint movement. He established a number of important institutions, including the Brigham Young University and the Perpetual Emigrating Fund. He also helped to organize the Utah Territory and to secure statehood for Utah.

Young's Teachings

Brigham Young was a prolific speaker, and he gave thousands of sermons and speeches during his lifetime. His teachings covered a wide range of topics, including faith, family, government, and the role of women.

Young taught that faith is essential for salvation. He said, "Faith is the first principle of the gospel. It is the foundation of all righteousness. Without faith, it is impossible to please God." Young also taught that faith is a gift from God, and that it can be increased through prayer and study.

Young taught that the family is the most important unit in society. He said, "The family is the foundation of society. It is the place where children are taught the principles of righteousness and where they learn to love and serve others." Young also taught that marriage is a sacred covenant between a man and a woman, and that it should be entered into with care and deliberation.

Young taught that government should be based on the principles of righteousness. He said, "Government is instituted of God for the benefit of man. It is designed to protect the innocent, punish the guilty, and promote the general welfare." Young also taught that the people should have a voice in their government, and that they should be able to choose their own leaders.

Young taught that women are equal to men in the eyes of God. He said, "Women are not inferior to men. They are equally entitled to the blessings of the gospel and to the privileges of the priesthood." Young also taught that women should be educated and that they should have the opportunity to participate in all aspects of society.
